"Both PROCESS EXPO and InterBev Process have contributed speakers to this year's program and we couldn't be happier with the results," said David Seckman, President and CEO of FPSA. "This is by far the most comprehensive beverage program we have ever been a part of and we are confident that beverage industry professionals will see value in attending these sessions that address critical issues within this industry. It is an excellent complement to the practical innovations they will find on the show floor among all of our exhibitors."

"InterBev is very excited to be co-locating with PROCESS EXPO and the vast education and networking opportunities this partnership will offer attendees of each show," said Jimmy Mouton, CEO and Managing Director of NuernbergMesse North America. "The food and beverage processing industries are stronger with collaboration between industry leaders, and we are thrilled about the additional benefits InterBev and PROCESS EXPO attendees gain from one another."

The joint beverage program is an integral part of this year's overall educational program including 35+ hours of education addressing a wide variety of important topics that cover all major segments of the food and beverage industry. Presented by experts from 15 of North America's top university food science programs, these sessions are free of charge to any registered attendee and will be conducted during show hours throughout the four day event.

Advance registration is $25 for food and beverage processors and registered attendees will have open access to all three trade show events; including all educational programs.
